Position Overview

Police Communication Intern position duties

Police Communication Interns are non-sworn telecommunication specialists who are provided paid, on-the-job training to become a Police Communication Technician (duties listed below).

Police Communication Technicians are non-sworn telecommunication specialists who provide a "life-line" to law enforcement officer's from the many different agencies for whom the CSP provides dispatch services. The Communication Officer Technician operates at a fully operational level.

Police Communication Technicians are trained to operate highly complex computers and communications equipment. They provide information and assistance to the citizens of Colorado and those visiting our state. These positions make decisions that are critical to the outcome of emergency situations. The information that is provided by them to field personnel is necessary for appropriate enforcement actions and is often vital to the safety of first responders.

These positions work independently and are under continuous public scrutiny. They must deal with citizens from various socio-ethnic backgrounds, often in very stressful situations. Position requires the ability to empathize with others and provide a calm and professional response even when under extreme duress. This position requires exceptional listening skills and the ability to prioritize job duties, often in an environment where multiple emergency situations can occur simultaneously.

Responsibilities and Qualifications

- Applicants must be willing and able to pass an extensive background investigation, polygraph examination, medical physical, psychological examination, and drug screen. If you have used marijuana within the last 12 months or any other illegal drug within the last three years, you will be disqualified.
- The background investigation is based on the following criteria, including but not limited to: driving history, criminal behavior/history, alcohol use/behavior, drug use/behavior, and integrity.
